Monitask X64

Monitask is an application that tracks the time of employees' work. The application has the advantage of being non-intrusive, thanks to the way the captures are done. A desktop screenshot is only taken when the timer is set to a certain interval, and the captured information is immediately saved. The employer can use the application to provide annoyances to the employee if the work is not up to the standard. Monitask can be used in companies with a budget or those that want to save money. The software runs on Linux and Windows and costs just $15/month. It has a step-by-step installation process and the installation on Windows takes about 4 minutes. Loved it! This was an awesome beginning for the day before the big plunge. I had the time to finally go swimming and take some of the chill off before the big plunge. The water was great and the views from the slide were beautiful. I wish we could have spent more time at the pool in the sun and here in the shade. Still amazing views and amazing scenery web-based task management applications that meet almost your needs. I use Todlist. I find it to be the most user friendly of the lot. Todlist will report on the time you work on a task, and it will include comments for each task/entry. You can set up times for not to work on a task. You can have an option to notify you of new comments or tasks. Todlist also has automatic reminders of previously set blocks of time to not work on tasks. There is no screen capture of tasks, but there are a variety of ways you can track your time. You can manually enter the time, or you can tell todlist to automatically calculate time spent on tasks via comments, which it will then track and time by. Q: JQuery Get Specific Key/Value in Object I have an array of objects. Is it possible to access the obj.name="john" only if obj.actions contains a string with "submit". I know I can do this with a loop but that seems inefficient. Thanks in advance.
